

Ideas For Implementing Learner Reflection

Educators have recognized the application of learner reflection across a wide range of educational settings. Ideas for implementing learner reflection are:

Have students to reflect on their personal, academic and professional goals. Review these goals and reflect on what allowed them to achieve them.

After completing a major assignment, students can participate in activities to reflect on what they learnt and how they learnt.

Students can take part in a brief survey to examine what they learned, the effectiveness of their participation and the use of this knowledge in future.

The nature of the questions that a student responds to will closely relate to the student learning outcome.

Reflection and reflective journaling should be incorporated into problem-based learning to make connections between prior and new knowledge.
